Become a Corporate Member at the Museum of London and align your brand with the most diverse and vibrant city in the world.

The Museum of London enriches the understanding and appreciation of London and all its people – past, present and future. As a home for learning, exploration and adventure, the Museum of London aspires to be a force for good in London, as London must be for the world.

To enable us to deliver this mission, we have embarked on one of UK's most significant cultural projects for a generation, the creation of an entirely new museum at West Smithfield. Currently under construction in the atmospheric buildings of Smithfield General Market, the new London Museum will open in 2026, giving even more Londoners and international visitors the opportunity to explore the London Collection and, through it, the capital's unique story.

The Museum of London site at London Wall has now closed to enable our curatorial team to carry out the painstaking process of preparing and reorganising the collections for the move to the new museum.

However the Museum of London Docklands will remain open throughout this transitional period, with major exhibitions, a diverse programme of lectures, learning activities and public events taking place regularly at this location.

Situated on West India Quay, Museum of London Docklands occupies one of the few remaining original warehouses, built in 1802, to store produce from the West Indies. A shared place in the heart of the East End, where stories cross and collide, Museum of London Docklands confidently shows how international trade, migration, enslavement and the River Thames were integral to shaping London and the world we live in today.
